Professor Kari Lukka is an expert in interpretative research in management accounting and has published extensively in the area of feedback and control, management performance and measurements in management accounting. His key contribution is in the area of developing research paradigms in management accounting. Professor Lukka was the editor of European Accounting Review for several years, and currently is an active member of the editorial board of that journal. He is known for his contribution in the development of case studies in activity-based costing research. He has published in top tier journal on the issue of management accounting research, in particular, approaches to case studies, constructive research, and on performance feedback.